

Senior Project Designer
Central London
£50,000 to £70,000 plus package
Vacancy ID 010136

What You'll Do

You will join the design and build interiors team of a respected London based workplace contractor and play a key role in shaping how their projects look and feel. This is a genuinely hands on design role where you are trusted to take ownership of your work and to influence the end result.

You will be involved from the earliest concept stages through to detailed design and delivery, producing interior schemes that balance creativity with practicality. AutoCAD will be part of your daily toolkit, with Revit used where appropriate, and you will work closely with project managers and delivery teams to ensure that what you design can be built smoothly on site. The projects you work on will be large, varied and often high profile, giving you the chance to tackle interesting briefs and see your ideas realised at scale. You will also take part in regular design workshops, where the wider team comes together to review work, share ideas and keep pushing creative standards higher.

What You'll Get

You will receive a competitive salary and package, alongside the opportunity to work on some of the more interesting and ambitious workplace projects in the market. You will be part of an established brand that gives you credibility when dealing with clients and the resources you need to do your job properly.

The team culture is an important part of what makes this role attractive. Designers are encouraged to collaborate, learn from each other and take pride in the work they produce. The regular design workshops are a good example of this, helping you develop your skills while staying connected to what the rest of the team is doing.

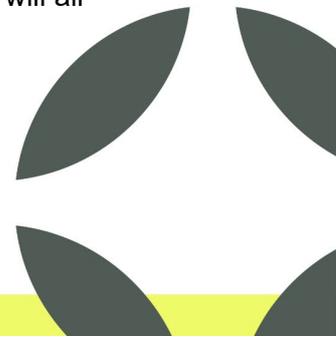

Because of the size and range of projects, you will enjoy genuine job variety. You will not be limited to one type of client or design style, which keeps the work engaging and helps you build a broad, impressive portfolio over time.

What You'll Need

You will need to be confident in AutoCAD, as this is essential to the role. Experience with Revit would be very useful and will allow you to get more out of the position, but it is not a deal breaker.

You should already have experience working as a project designer within a workplace or interiors environment, with the ability to take a brief, develop a concept and carry it through to detailed design. You will need to be organised, able to handle multiple projects, and comfortable discussing your ideas with both clients and colleagues.

A strong design eye, attention to detail and a professional, collaborative approach will all help you succeed here.

About the Company

You will be joining a well established workplace design and build contractor based in central London. They deliver a wide range of high quality interior projects for clients across multiple sectors and also operate internationally through a European office. The business combines the stability of a long standing brand with a genuine commitment to design, quality and the people who work there.
